WISHED SHE COULD DIE

And Be Free From Her Troubles, but Finds Better Way.

Columbia, Tenn.—"Many a time," says Mrs. Jessie Sharp, of this place, "I wished I would die and be relieved of my suffering, from womanly troubles. I could not get up, without pulling at something to help me, and stayed in bed most of the time. I could not do my housework."

The least amount of work tired me out. My head would swim, and I would tremble for an hour or more. Finally, I took Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I am not bothered with pains any more, and I don't have to go to bed. In fact, I am sound and well of all my troubles."

Cardui goes to all the weak spots and helps to make them strong. It acts with nature—not against her. It is for the tired, nervous, irritable women, who feel as if everything were wrong, and need something to quiet their nerves and strengthen the worn-out system.

If you are a woman, suffering from any of the numerous symptoms of womanly trouble, take Cardui. It will help you. At all druggists.

BRAND-TURNER

Monday morning, June 7, a very pretty wedding, which came as a complete surprise to Burbank's quiet home folks, occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. V. H. Turner, when their only daughter Mary Lou, was given in marriage to Mr. Charles Backster Brand of Albert, Fla. The bride is a Georgia girl and is one of Burbank's esteemed Sunday school workers and honored member of the social circle.

The groom is a native of New Jersey and formerly was a resident of Burbank for two years and has many friends here who admire him as a young man of sterling worth.

The bride's wedding suit was of Copenhagen blue and delightfully revealed her personal beauty and charm. The groom was attired in a neat suit of dark blue serge. The ceremony was performed in the presence of the immediate family, by Rev. J. P. Hight just a few minutes before the south-bound train was due. Every part of the planning for the event was so quietly carried out that when the fact was announced, their completely surprised friends made good use of the few minutes' warning and were at the station when the train pulled in at 11 o'clock, and showered the happy couple with rice and congratulations as they were leaving for their new home on a farm near Albert, Fla.

NIGHT OF MANY DISTURBANCES

When the Telephone Proved a Source of Trouble.

"These weather reports," said Rufus to Billings as they sat side by side in the trolley on their way to their respective homes, "make me tired. When the man in the weather tower thinks there is any probability of rain he takes the benefit of the doubt and says 'showers for tomorrow.' This morning I proposed to my wife that we make a pleasure trip with the children, but the weather report said 'rain,' so we gave it up. It has been delightful all day, and now, an hour after we should have got home, it is beginning to thicken up. We can't go tomorrow, for then it will rain sure enough."

"Another overrated addition to our conveniences," replied Billings, "is the telephone. Last summer I thought how nice it would be when my family were at our cottage in the country to be able to speak to them at any moment. So I had a telephone connection put in. The consequence was that the baby never coughed but my wife called me up to report the fact."

"One evening just before I left the office to go to my city home there was a ring at the telephone beside me on my desk, and, putting the receiver to my ear, I heard my wife say to me in a tremulous voice: 'Rags—Rags was our sky terror—has been missing all day. A tramp came by this morning, and I fear he has enticed the dog away. I'm sure there is a plan to rob us.'"

"I laughed at her fears, though I confess I was worried. Telling her to have the coachman, whose room was on the second floor of the barn, sleep in the house, I bade her goodbye, telling her that I would call her up before going to bed. Fortunately for me, I had an engagement to dine with an intimate friend and in this was something to occupy my mind and keep it off what my wife had told me. I remained away from home till 10 o'clock, then returned, and the first thing I did was to go to the telephone and ring up my wife."

"Oh, I am so glad you've called," she said. "I'm so worried."

"What about?"

"Rags hasn't come home, and I'm sure—"

"How about Patrick? Is he sleeping in the house?"

"Yes, I made sure of that by going to his room to see if he was there."

"Well?"

"I'm awfully nervous."

"Nonsense. Go to bed and to sleep. Here's a good night kiss for you, and I made a snack with my lips. She replied faintly, and, after telling her that I would sleep downstairs, where I could hear the telephone bell, I said 'Good night' and rang off."

"I slept on a divan in the drawing room. It was very hot, and I left a front window open. I was an hour getting to sleep and was awakened by a dazzling light shining in my eyes. It proved to be a halcyon in the hands of a night watchman, who, noticing the open window, was poking around to see if anything was wrong. I drove him away, but somehow I got to thinking about my wife's fears at home. At that time of night we are prone to magnify trifles, and I got up a terrible dread lest her fears were well grounded."

"The telephone bell rang out with a sound that to me plainly cried 'Murder!' I jumped out of bed and went into the hall, where the telephone box hung, and, putting the receiver to my ear, asked 'Well?'"

"My wife's voice, or a ghost of it, replied. 'Oh, Harry, there's some one trying to open a window on the piazza!'"

"Well, call Patrick and tell him to go down. My pistols—you know where they are, in the top bureau drawer—take them to him."

"There was a click as she hung up the receiver, and I waited breathlessly. In a few minutes another click told me that it had been taken again, and a frightened voice came: 'Oh, Harry, Patrick is not there! He was when I looked before, but he is not now. The window has been opened. There's some one coming upstairs. I'm going to faint!'"

"After waiting and ringing for five minutes—it seemed an hour—what do you suppose was the next thing I heard from that confounded telephone? 'Cholly, gone to bed? No? Well, come down to the club and have a nightcap.' In vain I tried to get central. It was no use. The wires had got crossed, and I was shut off from my wife, who was doubtless being murdered."

"In twenty minutes I was at the station inquiring when the next train left. When they told me 'in the morning' I begged for an engine. But the superintendent had gone to bed, and they wouldn't wake him up. I waited in agony till the train left and reached home at 8 o'clock."

"My wife was in the garden with the children picking roses. When she turned and saw me she looked surprised and asked what brought me home. After I had informed her, in no affective tone, she told me that it was Patrick who was coming upstairs. He had stolen out to go to a dance and got locked out. He had no difficulty in opening the window catch with his knife, and as he went past my wife's door there was a hitch in the telephone service. I felt something rub my leg, and, looking down, there was Rags wanting to say 'Good morning.' He had got wind of the day before of a new field for rats and had gone for a day's sport."
